

“Call Back Yesterday”

by Jordan Prejean, copyright 2017

Opening narration:

You're looking at the final refuge of those who've fallen behind the relentless march of time. This is a lonesome place, a dying place. But soon they'll discover there's a peculiar magic to memory and a potent power in the past. And you'll travel with them down the long years of their lives to a place which lies just this side of The Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

It is said that you can't go back again, that these pictures from the past are only forgotten images from a dusty album of photographs. But if you find yourself somewhere you haven't been in years and all the familiar faces haven't aged a day, you want to check your calendar. You may have wandered into The Twilight Zone.