

“The New Creation”

by Holly Brown, copyright 2017

Opening narration:

The place is a small town in upstate, NY, the time is the present. We were all unaware how it started for the beginning was too small, too seemingly insignificant to notice. We all became enthralled by the newest creation at the local coffeeshop. People would wait for an hour for this specific creation. This creation would quickly ensnare each of us into an addiction...an addiction so powerful that it could only be found in the inner regions of the Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

Our little town is no more. We have all succumbed to the disease that has caused us all to turn against our neighbor, to abandon meaningful pursuits in exchange for the fuzzy oblivion that this creation provides. Our control has been taken through our own gluttonous pursuit of this creation. Now we are servants forevermore among the ruin.