Opening narration:

Poland...circa 1941. Here we find Mr. Levi Tollman, suitcase in hand, head bowed in prayer, pleading for a miracle. Glancing upward, his sallow eyes behold an iron sign—three singular words that neither he, nor mankind itself, would ever truly comprehend: ARBEIT MACHT FREI. The place is Auschwitz/Birkenau, some newly constructed death camp upon a parcel of land never to be charted on any earthy map—located to the east of insanity and just along the outskirts... of The Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

As the final ashes from Hell’s winter fall silently to the ground, Levi Tollman miraculously staggers to freedom. His prayer was answered—but for the millions that were not, he could only weep...for in his heart he knows that as long as the human race ignores its humanity, there shall be no end to man’s long and arduous journey... in and out of The Twilight Zone.
