

“Past Time”

Opening narration:

An ordinary baseball field in a small town. This could be any baseball field in any small town, but for Jane and Helen—two middle-aged women returning to the town they grew up in on the occasion of their mother's funeral—they may find that their past is about to catch up with them.

Closing narration:

Call it the fountain of youth or perhaps just two lonely women who decided they were better off living in a time when things were much simpler. In any event, Jane and Helen are enjoying some long overdue sister time and the chance to have a catch on a baseball field that is located in the Twilight Zone.
