

“The Last Supper of Rupert Goldfarb”

Copyright 2018 by Paul Fecteau

story by Ted Gonzaga and Steve Towne

Opening narration:

A funeral banquet in memory of a man who lived to be very old and very rich, a time to savor a life well lived, and Rupert Goldfarb did live well, though not always right, and one consequence of that is a gathering of mourners who care not for the feast but what comes after — the reading of the will. They don't know, however, that tonight's main course will be served in The Twilight Zone...

Closing narration:

A sick joke, the product of madness at the end of life, to be sure, but a madness that brought with it a reckoning, so as the charities are receiving Mr. Goldfarb's largesse, his would-be heirs are also getting their just deserts, served cold in The Twilight Zone.
