

“Verboten”

copyright 2018 by Carol Bryant

Opening narration:

Some words stay with you. Perhaps from fear, perhaps from repetition. Forbidden was that word for the child with the tiny blue flower perched over her right ear. In just the right light, she'd have inspired Monet. For the next half hour, you'll experience terror on earth through the eyes of youth, a tale that can only be told through the lens of the Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

Young Miss Anne Frank, who breathed life into words written on a diary in a sheltered attic space. The now tattered blue flower remains in the binding of her book. She asked her parents what verboten meant. She found out too soon for the crime of being born Jewish. This is now, this is happening, and this should not be acceptable. When we forget, we repeat. Let history teach us to condemn hate. Tonight's retrospection from the Twilight Zone.