

“We Were Wrong About Death”

Copyright 2018 by Brian Skalak

Opening narration:

Cold, lifeless, deceased, stiff. These words belong in a dictionary for the dead. But for one man who goes simply by the title “Sir,” these terms need not apply. His lust for adrenaline and risk has made him a nightly gentleman caller to death herself. But today he’ll roll the dice for the last time on a rigged craps table... in The Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

The mystery that is life and death is a tale as old as time with more pages than man can read in one sitting and a forward written by Fate. But in these hollowed pages we’ll find the answers that have plagued our questions since the dawn of existence. This story of “Sir” is not easily retold, for he dipped more than his toe into the pool of the beyond, leaving one more book left overdue in the library... of The Twilight Zone.
