Opening narration:

The latest toast of minor league baseball is a different kind of player. At third base—Nora Rose. Talented. Intelligent. Athletic. However, now working under someone virulently opposed to any break with tradition in America’s favorite pastime, one could consider Nora to be in what is sometimes referred to as a “hostile work environment.” Neither she nor Coach Phil realize that their roster’s imminent doubleheader will be played...in The Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

In war, in business, and in sports, one rises while another falls. The value of tradition sometimes gives way to change. And just as Phil is now relegated to the local little league, Nora Rose cements her place in history as the first woman ever to be called up to major league baseball. It just goes to show that anything can happen when you hit one straight out of the park, and straight into...The Twilight Zone.
