

“I Dreamed You Here”

copyright 2018 by Benjamin Roque

Opening narration:

Witness one Paul Ember — at least that’s the name on his uniform. He has no memory, strangely, other than that of his own birth; but not a conventional birth. You see, he’s just occurred in this unfamiliar world. But his identity is moot: There is a voice — a sleeping voice. A voice that if he’s not careful around, may open up the ground, and deliver him into the deepest abyss of The Twilight Zone.

Closing narration:

Case in point, tread lightly around a sleeping host who whispers “I dreamed you here.” When those colossal eyes open beneath your feet, and consciousness is returned, it’ll be too late when you find out you only lived as part of a dream. A dream had by the ancient landscape you once walked upon. A dream you may find yourself in when your only memory is that of being born in The Twilight Zone.