Opening narration:

Five-year-old Timmy Denslow has put the word in Santa’s ear. Timmy wants a puppy for Christmas, and his parents wish oh-so-much they could find what he wants. A boy should have a dog. But the problem is something not even the best scientists can explain, and not even Santa can fix. On this day a week before Christmas, every dog seems to have vanished from the earth.

Closing narration:

Growing up means that some of the pleasures of childhood have to be put away. The human race has grown up, and the parents of us all have decided we no longer need dogs. The dogs have gone to a younger, more playful civilization on another planet. Except — maybe for one — or two — but Timmy isn’t telling. There are secrets that must be kept ... even in the Twilight Zone.
