Opening Narration

You’re looking at a portrait of the tired and lonely. A sad man who has been there, done that, gotten the requisite t-shirt, and who would gladly trade that last trinket for a shroud and some rest. He’s made the long and arduous trek over the hill, and is horrified to see that there is no momentum down the other side to the end point. In a few minutes he’ll be reminded of some of the joys that came along the way; joys that were whisked away into the most aged area of the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

A very wise man once said “It isn’t the destination, it’s the journey.” You’ve just spent a tortured evening with Ebenezer, a wise man who would argue the accuracy of that sentiment. For Ebenezer, it’s all about the destination; a destination that waits on the other side of the Twilight Zone.
