Opening Narration:

Picture this: a town catering to the rich and famous. Designers and famous restaurants dot the streets made so famous the world around that tourists’ flock to its streets just to see and be seen. Now imagine a paranoia so sweeping that the welcome mats are pulled in, doors and windows boarded up and a town barricaded against anyone who doesn’t belong. Political upheaval in another country or continent? Or is 2020 opening a new chapter in American history that echoes fears of the past and foretells the future, in the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration:

Another election has come and hopefully, gone. But was anything really settled in this four-year exercise in democracy? Or were the niceties and masks of polite society so ripped away that a national identity is forever changed? Perhaps the answers lie only in history books, or in the Twilight Zone.
