

“A Different Kind of Rejection”

© 2021 by Paul Dee Fecteau

Opening Narration

Let it be duly noted that Morison Lamont has long had a reputation as a jealous lover, one it appears he deserves based on the rage he exhibited when he found Francine’s apartment empty. But now that the landlord has told him Number 9 has been vacant for months, and the neighbors don’t know anyone named Francine, Mr. Lamont is concerned not only with losing his girl but his sanity. His stroll down Lover’s Lane has led him into the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Step outside this room, and you might hear couples laughing at the bar down the street, but Morison Lamont prefers to drink alone. He stares at the ring and at the key like they might reveal more than they already have. Until they do, his consolation is that he has Francine all to himself in the Twilight Zone.