Opening Narration

"Good luck. You might as well bang your head against a brick wall." Those are the words spoken to Stephen in front of nearly 30 parents during a school council meeting. The reason? Stephen's predecessors of the safe school committee were unsuccessful in convincing the city to employ a crossing guard at traffic lights for the safety of school children. Stephen felt angry and embarrassed enough to prove them all wrong.

Closing Narration

Stephen was reminded of a Franklin D. Roosevelt quote: “If we attack our problems with determination, we shall succeed.” Near the end of the same school year, Stephen succeeded in convincing the city to hire a crossing guard using statistics the city already had in their own 'safe study' resulting in employing crossing guards. A lesson not found in a text book or taught just in school, but also The Twilight Zone.
