

“Internal Conflict”

© 2021 by Ryan Harmon

Opening Narration

It was a quiet Tuesday evening when John Smith was murdered in his own home. His body bled onto the carpet that he had marched across a hundred times. John’s killer knelt beside him to hear the dying man's last words. What the murderer heard shook him to his core. As it would turn out, the knife in John’s back was his key to entering... The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

A failing business, a regretful father, and a misguided son, the perfect concoction for agony. A once respected individual now sits on the street in the dead of winter contaminated by death and caught up in remorse. Sorrow is the only word to describe his condition. Driven by money and fueled by desire, with nothing but the voice of his father in his head. His mind wandered as he began to doze off into... The Twilight Zone.