

“Last Stop”

© 2021 by Carol Saint Martin

Opening Narration

This ordinary-looking café is the perfect spot for a late-night stop. A place where one can unwind and escape from life's problems for just a little while. At least, that's what Susan Finley is hoping for. You see, she did a bad thing once. Something that has been haunting her ever since. If only she could escape... to this café in the middle of nowhere... life would be simpler. Little does she know that her demons will soon follow her into the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Susan's torment no longer eats away at her. This ordinary café proves to be her last stop, despite her best efforts and she and all its other occupants must learn the hard way that crime does not pay and the past is always lurking in the shadows... At least, that is how it is in the Twilight Zone.
