

“Mr. Perfect”

Opening Narration

Here's a man with an incredible complex, the constant need to be perfect; conditioned to create the most convenient, digestible life: the nicest family, friends, safest job, and the greatest reputation, all with a smile on his face. This man is Richard Prichard, with even a name perfectly satisfying to the ear, who avoids all conflicts with himself, others, and any situations. He swallows his pride daily, causes his own inconveniences, self-sabotages opportunities by keeping his life as is, all to be perceived as rock solid, steady, and perfect. He takes the easiest roads in life, and he'll soon realize things are far from perfect when going down the road, into the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Lives, and people aren't perfect. Perfectionism is an illusion, and if subscribed to it, the result will be a mirror. And in that mirror, you'll see yourself as an illusion as well, in the Twilight Zone.
