

“Remember the Day”

© 2021 by James Oneill

Opening Narration

The day that starts like any other.

The same sights and sounds in the life of one Charles August, who on this particular day finds himself the middle man between the old world of yesterday and the shimmering hope of tomorrow presented by the Martian visitors extending an olive branch to all mankind.

This is the day the future depends on.

And it rests on Mr. August's narrow shoulders.

Another day, in The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Remember the day, because it was the day hope turned away.

Put off by our anger, our greed and our apathy towards the suffering of our fellow man.

In truth, Charles August couldn't have saved the world, nor could anyone else.

Because man begets hatred and hatred is the death of hope.

Another sorry volume, in The Twilight Zone.
