Opening Narration

Here is Liam Carter. A boxing superstar in search of himself after an unexpected blow of a life-altering illness. Still in a mental rut despite his recovery, he’s prescribed a new form of therapy— conversing with a holographic version of his younger self. Little does Liam know, however, this therapy comes with a side effect in small print— a trip to The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

They say no one knows you better than yourself. So though this may be a therapy in the future, it’s not a needed one. Younger versions of you always exist within, helping you find closure and inspiration. Although we may battle some wounds for life, persevering is the ultimate victory. And as Liam watches the sunset, he now knows this too. He’s still the same champ, only now all the more stronger. A lesson one can always hold dear in or out of...The Twilight Zone.
