

“The Ninth Life of Mr Cheshire”

© 2021 by James Hughes

Opening Narration

Portrait of a man who can walk past a rose garden and only see the thorns. The name of this cantankerous fellow is Morris Cheshire, who is all bark and quite a bit of bite. On this stormy night, the source of his extreme annoyance comes in the form of a stray cat who has taken up a residence on his doorstep. Tonite these two "opponents" will experience an incredible transformation, the kind that can only happen in the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Today Mr. Cheshire spends his sunny days soaking in all of the color and life that his animal sanctuary and botanical gardens provide him. You see, because the old adage about having to walk a mile in another's shoes in this particular case should have mentioned covering that distance in paws instead. A happy "tail" of redemption from the Twilight Zone.
