Opening Narration

Meet Robert Sullivan, enthusiastic newspaperman, always alert for a good story. Only maybe Robert Sullivan is a little too inquisitive. Perhaps this dedicated contributor to one of New York City’s major daily papers is to learn firsthand something of the truth about a certain proverb that has to do with curiosity and cats.

For Robert Sullivan is about to peruse the first page of an intoxicating story known to every man in every town but understood fully by none, a story that begins with loneliness and ends after midnight, a story whose intricate threads can be unravelled only in...the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Thus a man’s life ends—too much of it spent contemplating others’ opinions of him, basking in the praise he read in their minds when granted an ability for which he was not prepared, one granted to him on that fateful and inadvertent excursion...into the Twilight Zone.
