Opening Narration

Witness Mr. Glenn Rossen, just another of Henry David Thoreau’s men of quiet desperation. However, all of that is about to change. In just a few moments, Mr. Rossen will receive a knock at his door from a most unusual guest, and he will be forced to confront the most frightening truth of his existence: free will. By sundown, Mr. Rossen will have to make a decision, and he will be bound to that choice for the rest of his days—held accountable by The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Mr. Glenn Rossen—no longer a man of quiet desperation, you can find him in your local theaters, schools, and VFW halls—belting out the same tune: every man, woman, and child has a song, and when it’s your turn to sing, let it rip, for there are no rehearsals or encore performances in the Twilight Zone.
