Opening Narration

Picture of a man in conflict: One Gordon Grayson. Businessman, husband, and father. Someone who wants the best for his family, be that a bigger house, better car, or fancier vacation. Gordon has found himself caught on the very unstable ground between the past and the future. Most refer to this as the present, but for Grayson it is the sometimes perplexing but ultimately illuminating place we call The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Gordon Grayson has discovered that the past never actually leaves us. It lingers in the shadows only to reveal itself at the most inconvenient of times. As for the future, it lies just outside our reach like the brass ring on a colorful carousel. Grayson will have to linger here until he's ready to live with both the actions of his past and the consequences that will follow, as no man can escape his own truth.
