Opening Narration

Imagine a man, then a woman, now a robot. A husband and wife, but instead of flesh and blood, they're mechanical beings from another world, waking among us to discover what makes humans tick. Will they discover we're martyrs or monsters, or will they get lost in the merriment of men as they try to navigate the Twilight Zone?

Closing Narration:

For all the love we make and all the bombs we detonate, nothing undoes the human race like the addiction to self. Joy without experience and beauty without sacrifice makes us a sad jack of no trades, mastered by all in the Twilight Zone.
