Opening Narration

Damian Melfort, a man in mid-life, revisits a haunt of early boyhood, looking—with adult eyes—at the moldering walls and fossilized carpets of his grandmother’s house. Ghosts speak to him now, in echoes of the old woman’s creaking voice: a pained yet exquisite memory. Soon, the room around him will melt away, restoring Damian to a time he believed long dead, opening a forgotten corridor only found...in The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration:

Where does the car go? Who knows? But the promise of those plush seats has stirred something inside him, and Damian Melfort rides into an unknown future, roads unrolling smoothly through the windows on either side of him in purple dusk. The purr of the Mercedes’ engine lulls him into believing that Life doesn’t need to end in oblivion. That some roads are worth taking...even if they venture far into the high country of...The Twilight Zone.
