Opening Narration

Meet Mickey Blevins, a Marine veteran, as he stands before a glistening black panel at the Vietnam Wall. It’s midnight on Christmas Eve. Rain is falling just as it did on Christmas Eve in a Vietnamese rice paddy many years ago. The stillness of that night was shattered by mortar bursts and machine gun fire. The memory of being frozen with fear that moment has tortured him with a lifetime of unrelenting guilt. Join our subject tonight as he searches for what can be given only in the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

He stares with pleading eyes at the names of his comrades memorialized forever in granite...

Through the misty rain, he sees their smiling faces as they beckon for him to come. He draws his last breath from lungs ravaged by Agent Orange and falls knowing there is forgiveness on Christmas Eve, in the Twilight Zone.
