Opening Narration

Submitted for your approval, this debonair set of crooners assembles a barbershop quartet: men who showcase their talents beyond seatbacks. As you’ve observed they are well coiffed, save one—Jack—the bass voice.

Tonight we will discover what beats four of a kind and that vocal notes are sharper than sheers. Because this audience’s fashion is found uniquely in...the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

The heavenliness of Jack’s voice finally should have brought tears of elation to the audience. But when disheveled hair drooped over his face they giggled, and booed him. Jack re-arranged his hair, bowed, and praised his stage mate’s performance.

His humility is rarer than a Royal Flush and his character qualities have become the most desirable look in town, as the citizenship realized this truth: patronize the barber with the bad haircut, because they give the good haircuts.

Tonight’s second chance at a first impression from...the Twilight Zone.
