Opening Narration

Meet Solomon Grover: a husband and father who calls the city his home and appears to have it all. But not everything's as it seems, for Solomon Grover has been haunted with an ominous inevitability—a burden he's carried his whole life. Today, Solomon Grover will make a decision to rid himself of this burden, but as he will soon discover, this decision will have unintended consequences in his life, and in the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

As King Solomon once said, “The wise man and the fool, die alike.” Today, beside a busy city street, the curse of time, aging, and death—the very fears Solomon Grover was running from his entire life—finally caught up with him. And even though Solomon Grover was acutely aware of his own mortality, it still took him by surprise. A lesson best learned in death, and in the Twilight Zone.
