Opening Narration

The man you see is the leader of what was once one of the world's superpowers. It had evolved into an international disgrace as the extreme right and left tore its society beyond repair, weakened by subdivisions and betrayal. The line in the sand has been drawn and next week's election will decide it all.

Closing Narration

Exit the architects of New America. The nation they founded is now a helicopter ride away from the motherland where a proper democracy has been re-established. As they witness cities burn and mass murders under social unrest, there is satisfaction in knowing that this experiment in emigration was the only solution to avoid civil war.

Was its collapse merely a byproduct of discord and tribalism, or was it part of the plan? "We The People" must include unity, even if that unity exists among thieves. A lesson learned in the Twilight Zone.
