Opening Narration

Portrait of a young writer suffering from a severe case of writer’s block. The words won't come to him, so he decides to go out for some fresh air to clear his head. He walks by an antiques shop, and the reflection of the sun on a shiny fountain pen catches his eye. The symbol for infinity etched into the pen entices him to buy it. He brings the pen home, hoping it will inspire him.

Little does he know, but just one stroke of that pen will send him right into the heart of the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Our young writer found his inspiration in the world of long ago from a mentor by the name of Mr. Serling, a man who was also a storyteller. Our time traveler went on to write stories for a much beloved tv show. A show known for generations as the Twilight Zone.
