

“The Man Who Wouldn't Disappear”

Opening Narration

Just outside the circle of high society exists a blemish. Not a false diamond or a bad review, but a man.

A man who speaks when they'd prefer he remain silent. A man who sheds light on the darkest edges of such a circle- and does so without prejudice of his implications.

Publicly they call him a charlatan, but behind closed doors they refer to him simply as “the man who won't disappear.” A man whose very existence acts as a constant reminder to them, that their actions and beliefs would be better suited for—the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

To a hammer, every problem looks like a nail. To high society, every inconvenience has a price. But truth's the only currency to the man wouldn't go away—and so a hammer was swung.

Little did they realize, that by pounding down one nail they'd be raising another in—the Twilight Zone.
