Opening Narration

Portrait of the best days: a flotilla of sailing and power craft, pontoon boats with barbecue grills aflame. The sights, sounds and smells of family fun.

Introducing Tomi, in the twilight of her years, suffering from the paradox of faith, verses proof.

She’s always believed in God, but now searches for a sign. Through the overwhelming tide, Tomi desperately reaches for an anchor—the kind of mooring found in the safe harbor of...the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

Tomi reflected on the day that left her more with disquiet, then peace. “Pontoon Boat,” she exclaimed!

Her revelation came by faith, not sight. She recalled the boats in the wind and waves, and realized:

Pontoon boats don’t drive through the water, they walk on top of it. Reminiscent of a lesson Tomi once learned in Sunday School, and she was soon rescued.

Tonight’s tale of leisure and life preservers from...the Twilight Zone.
