Opening Narration

It's four in the evening, the beginning of a well-deserved weekend for Roger Fountaine. He and his girlfriend are visiting a newly opened curio shop in Columbus, Ohio. Roger is a man who lives his life based on facts and reasoning. His girlfriend buys him a gift at this shop. A very old and very mysterious wooden watch. This watch not only tells time, but tells thoughts.

Closing Narration

They say a mind is a terrible thing to waste, and that our thoughts govern our reality, Roger has discovered that his new watch is governing his thoughts and reality, if only he could stop thinking thoughts. He now has all eternity to discover that the grey matter beneath his skull has now become his worst nightmare, as his watch is set to the dimension of the Twilight Zone.
