Opening Narration

A portrait of the modern American Worker. A one-hour commute and an eight-hour office schedule in exchange for the currency to live. The office: a modular desk, office chair, the low rumble of conversation, a half-empty coffee cup, a monitor, and a computer accessing the Web. Sitting in front of that monitor is Leslie Peregrine, who has spent her entire life longing for something more. The office is her prison and the computer her shackles. She is about to free her fetters on a journey into the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

A curious aspect of humanity is a common desire for an external force to assist in our earthly problems...A wish granted to Ms. Peregrine...A human freed from her corporate bondage, but now residing on a planet 20,000 light years from Earth. She currently spends her days staring through the bars of a cage in the Twilight Zone.
