Opening Narration

The time is a September morning. The place is a street in your town. Meet Mr. Miller, an elderly gentleman who combines his morning routine with shepherding his grandson to elementary school. On this particular morning, on this particular street, the Sun rises in line with the pavement. It is the fall equinox. A time of perfect balance. But Mr. Miller will find his life far from perfect after he delivers his grandson to school and makes a return trip home through The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

The clockwork of cosmic events usually happens without notice. People hurry to work, to school, or to whatever pulls them out of their beds. For Mr. Miller, a perfect east-west alignment of the Sun was far from ordinary. It offered a chance to correct a tragic turn of events. Lives saved and lessons learned from a line of sight into ... The Twilight Zone.
