

“Lost in a Good Book”

copyright © 2024 by Michael S. Poteet

Opening Narration

Portrait of a man paging through the past: Mr. Chester Parr, whose secondhand bookshop is full of faded folios, broken leather bindings, and abandoned dreams. Mr. Parr’s passion for the written word has crumbled like rotting parchment, and great authors now have no more value to him than the price he can pencil inside their books’ front covers.

But Mr. Chester Parr’s story with books is about to turn a page, because the odd little volume he’s inspecting at the moment is a rather curious edition, printed and bound in the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

It’s been said books take us to new places. For Mr. Chester Parr, those words are no mere figure of speech. Should you happen to find that odd little volume on the shelf at a used bookstore, handle it with care, and think twice before you crack open its covers.

Tonight’s bibliographic nota bene—from the Twilight Zone.