Opening Narration

Norman Saxon wandered into this quaint little bookstore on a mission. He is perusing the shelves in search for a volume to take him away from the trials and tribulations of his humdrum life, an escape into a world of romance and adventure.

Mr. Saxon is about to discover that the old saying that a book is a magic carpet that can transport you to other places and other times is more than a figure of speech especially when you turn to page one in...The Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

A cautionary tale for the reading public that what you wish for is not always what it seems and that all stories do not end with “and they lived happily ever after” in...The Twilight Zone.
