

“The Land of Lost Things”
copyright © 2024 by Danielle Adams

Opening Narration

Here we see D in her garden. The wind picks up and she stands upright to find herself in the eye of a cyclone. Keys, rings, necklaces, glasses, lighters, notebooks, cats are swirling around her. She is having a hard time keeping her balance from the force of the wind. She sees some of her old friends and relatives and grasps at them but they are traveling at lightning speed. Little does she know, she has entered the land of lost things. She has entered the Twilight Zone.

Closing Narration

At twilight, D is sitting in an old rocker in an open field. Adorned in her lost jewelry and surrounded by treasures she long forgot, the wind whips around her. Lured by materials and hopes of filling a hole in her memory where all lost things lived, she will forever wonder if she made the right choice, as it most always is in the Twilight Zone.