

“The Tangled Web”

© 2024 by Scott Talbot Evans

Opening Narration

Some people sell their souls for money. Others for power. But Clifford B. Hardshaw asked the devil to give his tongue the magical power to lie. And now, whatever he says, no matter how crazy or stupid, people lap up like swine at a trough. There he goes now, blowing hot air harder than a bathroom hand dryer, not only stretching the truth, but incinerating it and scattering the ashes. But what our test subject doesn't realize is that the truth always comes out eventually... in the Twilight Zone!

Closing Narration

Portrait of a bitter broken man. Mr Hardshaw thought he could weave a tale tall enough to carry him to the stars, but instead discovered that his tangled web was only good for snaring himself. He learned a little too late that honesty is the best policy...in the Twilight Zone!